Rising to the Challenge

All for-profit and non-profit organizations and individuals are reeling from the current challenge we are facing. The full impact of the coronavirus pandemic is presently unknown and uncertain to us all.

Bailey, Carr CPAs, P.C. continues to operate at full efficiency. We have half of our staff working at the office the majority of the time. The other half are working off-site with full and secure remote office capabilities. For the past several years we have had the capability to securely operate offsite. All our team members are able to provide the services that you expect from us, both from our office and from their home offices.

Whether the services relate to tax, audit and attestation, or consulting, we have the resources available at our fingertips to continue to provide all services in an efficient and timely manner. Moving forward, we recommend that all organizations and individuals take the necessary steps to manage their cash flow. If a shortage is presented for the near-term, review the opportunities where cash or financing may be available. All organizations should reevaluate their business models to determine if they need to be adjusted, if only temporarily, or in some cases-- permanently.

Other concerns to be addressed for organizations with the economy beginning to re-open are return-to-work considerations. It is highly recommended that you reach out to your human resource service providers. A checklist to determine health and safety for employees, volunteers, and the public would be a good start. Make sure you address all local, state, and federal requirements, and that all postings and policies are distributed to all employees.

Staying healthy is the primary concern for all. We will continue to operate as we have the last two months. Documents or information we may require should continue to be forwarded either through our client portal system, mailed with USPS, facsimiled, dropped off in our entrance area, or scanned and emailed to the appropriate team member.

If you have any questions or concerns, please do not hesitate to reach out to us.
